CREATING COLOUR SCHEMES

UNDERSTANDING THE COLOUR WHEEL

The colour wheel is a foundational visual tool used to understand colour relationships, guide colour mixing, and achieve harmony in paint application. It is widely applied in painting, interior decoration, architecture, branding, and visual design. By organizing colours in a circular format, the colour wheel shows how colours interact, combine, and contrast with one another.

At the core of the colour wheel are primary colours: red, blue, and yellow. These colours cannot be created by mixing other colours and serve as the base for all colour combinations.

When two primary colours are mixed, they form secondary colours. Red and yellow create orange, blue and yellow create green, and red and blue create purple. Further mixing of a primary colour with a neighboring secondary colour produces tertiary colours, such as red-orange, blue-green, or yellow-green. Together, these three groups form a complete colour system.

TONAL COLOUR

Tonal colour refers to the use of one colour (or closely related colours) in different levels of lightness and darkness. This is achieved by adjusting the tone, tint, or shade of a single hue rather than changing the hue itself.

CONTRASTING COLOUR

Contrasting colour involves the deliberate use of colours that differ significantly in hue, value, or temperature to create visual distinction and emphasis. The strongest form of contrast occurs when complementary colours—colours opposite each other on the colour wheel—are used together.

CONTRASTING COLOUR

Colour harmony refers to the pleasing and balanced arrangement of colours that work together without visual conflict. Harmonious colour schemes are guided by relationships defined by the colour wheel, ensuring that colours complement rather than compete with each other.

RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN TONAL, CONTRAST, AND HARMONY

Tonal colour, contrast, and harmony are not opposing concepts. They work together to define the character of a space or surface. Tonal variation adds depth, contrast provides focus, and harmony ensures cohesion. Successful colour application balances all three, using contrast where emphasis is needed, tonal shifts for refinement, and harmony to unify the overall composition.
